

The Daily Sketch called it a "less-holiday spirit" and the Daily Mirror emblazoned: "Joy trains halt arms."

It took 700 special trains, 200 of them from London, to take a million or more holiday makers to the seaside during the week-end. The press screamed that this meant a cost of 5,000 tons of coal and congested tracks headed for transport of war supplies.

War-time rationing took the joy out of the week-end for some. Holiday makers ate up a week's food supply by Sunday night at some resorts. And the food ministry served notice there'd be no extra supplies. Restaurants closed as their cupboards ran bare, one town saw its last loaf of bread vanish yesterday.
