

"Growing Pains"

"Aw gee, Sis! Baseball is a boy's game. You can't play with us!"

AT some time or other all of us reach the stage of adolescence. "Growing Pains," a laughable story about the awkward age, shows the joys and sorrows of growing up.

Presented under the direction of Mr. Andrews, on February 16, "Growing Pains" proved a popular hit. Mr. Andrews is to be complimented for his foresight and skill in casting and directing persons so expertly fitted for their roles, and the Master Playcrafters congratulated for the efficiency of the stage crew and committees.

Dick Mara as George, Ellen Kelley as Terry, Kathryn Kelly as Prudence, Louise Woodruff as Mrs. McIntyre, and Jack Herman as Professor McIntyre all reacted splendidly to clever direction and proved themselves actors of no little ability. Through the play one felt as if the actors were having every bit as much fun and no more work than the audience. The supporting cast was, in some measure, responsible for this. Other members of the cast included: Edwin Bohne, Harriet Burger, Bob Cafarelli, Helen Davidson, Jean Doan, Charles Letsche, Donald Oakes, Perry Pindar, Marjorie Polifeme, Arthur Richards, Louise Rossheim, Helene Sieg, George Thornley, Marjorie Woodworth, and Bruce Losche.

Boy meets girl.
